"I very rarely get questions about sea levels. It is not something that people are worried about"

"Nobody shows an interest in this, and I think that's strange. In many ways, people are very environmentally aware, but when it comes to investing several million in a property on the coast they insist on living as close to the water as they can possibly get"

"As estate agents we do not have the task to inform the buyer about these risks, and after all, the science is quite hypothetical"

"Short term, I can't see this as being a problem. It is not something that we need to provide information about or see as a threat. "

"When it comes to this type of long-term, natural change, the buyer has the overarching responsibility to find out about faults and problems with the property"
